

Teacher honored by national group

ORANGE — Tim Cohen-Mitchell of Greenfield has been named a 1999 Certified Entrepreneurship Teacher of the Year by the National Foundation for Teaching Entrepreneurship.

Cohen-Mitchell is a co-founder and director of the Young Entrepreneurs Society, a program that teaches at-risk and low-income teens in the Orange area how to start and operate their own small businesses. He received a plaque and an honorarium of $1,000.

He was one of 10 people honored last month at an event attended by 350 in New York City. Also receiving awards were 10 young entrepreneurs, plus several adults for their lifelong achievement. Among them were William Donaldson, former chairman and chief executive officer of the New York Stock Exchange; Jeffrey Raikes, a vice president of Microsoft; Bernard Goldhirsh, publisher of Inc. Magazine; and Diana Ross, performer and producer.

The society is a program of the Orange Revitalization Partnership and receives support from more than a dozen groups and organizations.